

See yourself through the eyes of a child

This arrived at Christmas time so at first I thought it was a manger scene with baby Jesus and radiant streams. Reading the accompanying letter I discovered that it is Sunny's (age 5) interpretation of me giving a massage. I love how happy my client is and that the portrait is a study in golds.

Seriously though, children see our best selves. And even if they are likely to mention, loudly and at an inopportune time, some part of us that we don't particularly care for, they usually do so with no judgement. They are pointing out something that is part and parcel with who we are to them and they wouldn't have us change it. Embrace those parts as easily as they do because, clearly they are worthy of love and affection!
